

ABSTRACT

A device is attached to a building structural element adjacent to a position where ductwork will be installed and is used to support that ductwork during installation. One worker can thus install long sections of ductwork without requiring assistance of other workers to support the ductwork. The device is collapsible and is adjustable and includes at least one clamp element.